

Session 14: Your Conversion Story

Key Points...

1. Your story is one of your most valuable business assets.
 - Customers need a way to connect to you and your business, and your story provides it.
 - The more your story involves elements that your Customer has experienced... the better.
 - Your story is an asset, so refine it!
2. Humans understand experiences and information in relationship to stories.
 - It seems that in order to understand something, we must relate it to other things in a format called "Story."
 - This allows us to see how elements are related to each other and to the whole.
 - Minds think & process in STORY form.
3. When we don't have a story provided, we create one.
 - We've already learned about the phenomenon called "confabulation."
 - We seem to always be looking for how elements fit together, and trying to create a story that "makes sense."
4. Your story should allow your customer to relate to you.
 - The more people have in common, the more they feel like they can "relate" to each other.
 - In order for your story to help your Customer relate to you, it must include elements that they have experienced personally.
5. Your story should touch on key emotional experiences.
 - There are elements of stories that are most "touching" to people.
 - Being at a disadvantage, trying and failing, emotional drama, discovering winning formulas, achieving success when the chips were down - are all very interesting.
6. Your story should touch on these key elements
 - Started in same situation as Customer.
 - Tried & failed.
 - Breakthrough: Discovered the secret to success.
 - Created a system or Product.
 - Others used it and succeeded.
 - Now you can succeed.
