

Session 15: Marketing Copy that Sells

Key Points...

1. Copy is about the words you use to communicate in your marketing.
 - The words in your marketing carry the message, the meaning, and the ideas.
 - If you want to master Marketing, practice writing, speaking, and making videos of your copy.
 - If customers use particular words when they talk about their pain and desires, when we use those same words it'll make a huge impact.
2. Use short words, short sentences, and short paragraphs.
 - Short words are understandable by everyone.
 - Short sentences break ideas into bite-size pieces that keep communication clear.
 - Short paragraphs look and "feel" friendly - they don't intimidate.
3. Use long, detailed, persuasive copy that tells your whole story.
 - Even though you're using short words, sentences and paragraphs, you must use long copy to tell your entire story.
 - Imagine that you were face-to-face with your Customer, what would you need to tell them so they could make an informed decision?
4. Does anyone read, listen to or watch long copy anymore?
 - When someone sees a 30-page sales letter or a 45-minute video, they might ask "Will anyone read that?" or "Will anyone watch that?"
 - While attention spans and copy ARE getting shorter, it's a bad bet to bet against copy.
 - If you had the problem, you'd read it.
5. "Speak-Write" as if you were sitting with your prospect in person.
 - Writing Marketing copy is an exercise in imagining that you were talking in person.
 - Use what's called "Speak-Write" - so that your words sounds friendly and personal.
 - Speak to one person when you write copy!
6. Speak the language of real customers - not fantasy customers.
 - When you interact with your Customers, listen to the way they talk.
 - If you can, adopt their language, their phrases, and their tone - and adapt it to the copy you use in your Marketing.
 - The familiarity will build trust and credibility.
 - Don't try to talk fancy.
7. Only talk about things that are directly relevant to your prospect.
 - Don't use hype, fluff or sensationalism - if you can at all help it.
 - Keep every part of your message focused on something that's emotionally relevant and MOTIVATING.
 - Keep the "motivator" in your mind as you write your copy - don't forget it.
8. Make an outline of questions, answer them, and transcribe it.

- What benefit will your prospect get from going through your message?
- What are the fears and frustrations your prospect is going through that you solve?
- What Results, Benefits, and Relief will your prospect get?
- How did you discover that the product works?
- How can they know that it will work?
- Who is this for, and who is it not for?
