

Creating Your Customer Avatar

In order to best persuade a large number of people to buy your product or service, you must develop a voice or communication style and sequence that “speaks to” each Prospective Customer in a personally motivating way. Start by creating a “Customer Avatar” - or a mental image of a person who is a combination of those highly individual characteristics that make up a good Prospective Customer. Then “script” the communication sequence with them, from the CUSTOMER’S point of view.

What are the “defining characteristics” of your Prospective Customer - with focus on those that are specific to this group?

What are the common themes, stories, and phrases that your Customer uses to describe their challenge and their solution?

If you had to “script out” your dialog with your Customer Avatar from first meeting all the way to purchase, how would it go?
