

Your Client Conversation Story

The human mind tends to “think in stories.” Pure information without stories, examples and application tends to “roll off” and not stick.

Importantly, when you begin to tell a story, the person listening goes into “open relaxation” mode, their defences come down, and they begin picturing what you’re telling them.

Your story is an excellent way to build credibility and trust with your prospect which are both critical if you want them to take action and enroll in your coaching package. When creating your story, incorporate elements that your prospect can relate to directly. The more your story matches the reality, experience and world of your prospect, the more impact it will have.

Use this formula when creating your Client Conversation Story:

- Starting Situation: Where you were when you FIRST started
- Tried & Failed: Vivid, emotional story of trying and failing
- Breakthrough: Discovered the secret to success
- Created A System: Turned it into a method or coaching process
- Others Did It Too: Others used it, got consistent results
- You Can Succeed: Now I want you to have success and get the same result
